Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

Claims 1-9 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention. The claims are generally narrative and indefinite, failing to conform with current U.S. practice. They appear to be a literal translation into English from a foreign document and are replete with grammatical and idiomatic errors. For example: in each of claims 1 and 7, the preamble makes it unclear exactly what applicant is intending to claim, specifically, the “threadedly engageable coupling device” is for use with a “tightening assembly” where the tightening assembly includes the same “coupling device” in other words, “threadedly engageable coupling device” is claimed as being for use with itself which simply is not understood; further in claim 1 and similarly in claim 7, near the beginning of the last paragraph, the blade portions are claimed as “on” the proximal segment then as subsequently claimed as “extending from” the proximal segments where it is not understood how they could be both on and extending from the same segment; also in claim 1 and in claim 7, near the beginning of the last paragraph, it is not seen where the blades are “angularly displaced from one another” when they all appear to be at a same angle; finally, in claim 1 and in claim 7, near the middle of the last paragraph, there is found no antecedent basis for “said juncture”. In general, the claims require revision to comply with current US practice. They were examined as best understood.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

Claims 1-9 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Kirrish (US 4,033,243). As applied to the claims as best understood, Kirrish discloses a fastener as a nut (34' in Fig. 4) and a bolt (32), with a complementary coupling device (32' and 34 respectively) for threaded engagement with the fastener, comprising an abutment head (38) with an abutment wall, a cylindrical shank portion with a threaded section (56' and 44) and a plurality of blade portions (50) located on the shank an a segment proximal to the head. The blade portions being angularly displaced relative to the axis of the fastener and extending about the circumference of the shank defining a cutting edge beginning at an annular shoulder. The fastener is received in a tubular bore in a first article (i.e. 24) which has a diameter less than that of the blade portion such that the cutting edges cut into the sides of the bore (see Fig. 3) so as to retain the fastener within the bore. The examiner notes that in Kirrish the fastener is intended to installed with a blow If a hammer but, since the claimed installation method is, at best, an intended use limitation in the article claims of the instant application the device of Kirrish need only be capable of the intended use and since the structure disclosed in Kirrish is the same as that claimed in the instant application, it would be capable of the intended use. Though it is not entirely clear what applicant intends to claim based on the indefiniteness associated with the claims as noted above; however, in general, Kirrish discloses the feature of the angled blades at the section of the shank proximal to the head which is believed to be the improvement over the prior art which applicant intends to claim.

Conclusion

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.
